All is quiet at Knoxville and Chattanooga. Grant and Sherman have had their heads together, however, and important movements are said to be in the wind. Longstreet's forces are said to have gone into winter quarters at Rutledge and Morristown, in Eastern Tennessee, while Bragg's old army, now under Johnston, is recuperating near Dalton.

The only point where there seems to be any activity is in Tennessee, where the rebel cavalry under Forest and Wheeler are annoying our communications with Knexville and Chattanoega, &c. Our cavairy, however, are on the alert, and at last accounts both Forest and Wheeler have been roughly handled.

The rabel appear to have retired wholly from tee Mississippi river, so that for over a week no boat has been arnoyed in its passage up or down at any point.
